

Dear Sirs: It is absurd to restrict the dissemination of local traffic information by any means, whether over-the-air broadcasts or on satellite radio such as XM. Traffic, especially in the Washington DC area is bad enough without insane proposals by restrict the flow of information which only add to safety, use of less fuel, and the general well being of the population. If over-the-air broadcasters really have the "public interest" at heart, they would encourage rather than discourage the dissemination of traffic and other safety information. Are they out just for themselves, or for the general public wellbeing?

Please do not allow broadcasters to censor important public safety information to the public.

Thank you.

Tod Neuenschwander